Raw Puerh from Teaspec. . .

Posted on June 22, 2017 by CuppaGeek

This is my second voyage with Teaspec's Puerh. I tried their Ripe Puerh earlier this week and was quite surprised how much I enjoyed the dark robust earthy tones. I was excited to check out the Raw Puerh that Teaspec had so graciously allowed The SororiTea Sisters to check out.

Allowed to brew and cool for a moment, this tea was just as exciting as the Ripe Puerh. Unlike the Ripe version, this puerh gave me a lovely smooth rich tangy flavor. Incredibly well balanced. The earthy dark notes were still present but not as strong as the Ripe. There was also a slight hint of a smoky sweet tone, which I found quite intriguing.

Puerh is one of those teas that just keep me intrigued enough that I still dip my toe into this variety of tea now and then. I've always been more of a green tea girl but after enjoying both the Raw and Ripe Puerhs from Teaspec,

Looking at Teaspec's site, they have an amazing offering of teas that are calling my name. There is a Jasmine Envy (green jasmine) and a Jade Allure (roasted green tea) that I have to know more about.

Overall my experience with Teaspec's Puerh has been one that has opened my eyes (once again) to a variety of tea that I've always looked over. I need to be better about introducing puerh's into my daily drinking regimen.

Thank you Teaspec for this wonderful introduction into Puerhs!

Here's the scoop!

Tea is a passion that quickly turned into an obsession, very similar to my love for polka dots, the horror genre, and anything that is geeky and fun.I drink all kinds of tea and will try a tea twice to make sure I didn't bumble the first infusion.

Besides SororiTea Sisters, I'm also the blogger and genius (I use that word very loosely) behind CuppaGeek, where I review tea, books, and the horror genre.
